amnesty in Ireland, was he not aware there was not one of those who had spoken in the spirit of the hon. Member for Monaghan who did not know that he was preventing the recurrence of those periods? When they were attacking the administration of the law, however pure, however fair, however just, must they not know that they were incurring a responsibility beyond the mere responsibility of personal attack in the language that had been heard? They must know that, beyond that, they were bringing upon themselves the responsibility, which the people of Ireland ought to cast upon them, of making it necessary to administer the law sternly, untempered with that mercy, which, the moment it was shown, was used only for the purpose of attacking his right hon. and learned Friend while endeavouring to do his duty as faithfully as any just Minister of the Crown had ever performed it.

MR. SEXTON said, a more vicious principle had never been expounded than that just expounded by the Attorney General for England. The hon. and learned Gentleman argued that they must not protest against injustice, or else they must not hope for mercy. If the hon. and learned Gentleman thought that he could terrorize the Irish Party in the House of Commons into silence when justice demanded speech he was very mistaken, for they would treat him and his mercy with contempt. The Attorney General for Ireland had practically admitted the whole case which had been brought against the House with regard to jury packing. He had argued that a Catholic ought to be satisfied to be tried by a jury of Protestants. Would the right hon. and learned Gentleman like to be tried by a jury of Catholics when political and religious feeling was running high? In countries where the circumstances tended to moderate the rancours and hatreds of creed, it was unconstitutional or unjust to place the life and liberty of any man in the hands of a jury of a different creed. In Ireland, where political distrust and hatred existed in its acutest form, it was nothing more than moral murder to throw a man into the hands of jurors of an opposite creed. If they told the Protestants of Ireland that they looked to them to find verdicts, he could conceive no tactics more calculated to create exasperation among one set of people and arrogance in another class. There was no more disgraceful record in the modern judicial life of Ireland than the convictions in the Crossmag case. If the Government continued to pursue the system now in force, if they took their informers from the low class, if they coaxed, nursed, and bribed them, and made it a more brilliant career to be an informer than to be an honest man, if they persisted in the system of obtaining sham evidence by means of solitary imprisonment, and when the skin of the British Lion was short they pieced it out with the skin of the fox, it would be impossible for an honest man in Ireland to think his life or his property was safe. He wished now to refer to a case of police violence which came under his own observation during the recent Sligo Election. While some other gentlemen were proceeding peacefully to a place of meeting, a number of policemen disposed themselves artistically across the highway. They refused to leave the road, and when one gentleman, Mr. Brennan, raised his hand as a signal to be allowed to pass, and said "keep back," two of the constables sprang upon him with a ferocity that could not have been surpassed had he been a criminal seized in the act of murder. They twisted his arms and dragged him to the police barracks, and in the evening at a late hour he was conveyed before a magistrate. He (Mr. Sexton), speaking as an eye-witness, was in a position to state that Mr. Brennan only put up his hand and though several witnesses deposed to the same effect, and there was on the evidence of two policemen to the contrary, this respectable gentleman had since been fined £2. He would not disgust the ears of the House by deterring the language used towards him and other popular Representatives by the police; but speaking of this particular case, with the facts of which he was himself acquainted by observation, as well as his hon. Colleague (Mr. Lynch) he was entitled to claim a public inquiry. He would content himself with saying that such was the feeling engendered in the mind of every office in Ireland, from the lowest to the highest, by the feeling of protection by the Government, that no meanness or enormity was impossible. He supposed this was what was called a Constitutional Government. Nothing could be more absurd than the speeches they had heard from the Treasury Bench. Of what avail were the platitudes, the empty phrases, and the windy, unmeaning declamations of right hon. Gentlemen for the purposes of conciliation, while among the Officials of Ireland, from the Viceroy on his throne to the meanest constable in a village police barracks, the surest way to promotion was a course of insult and discourtesy to the people?

Mr. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT asked the indulgence of the House for a few moments while he referred to a Question which he had put to the President of the Board of Trade on the subject of the maladministration of the Suez Canal by its local officials—he did not say its Directors. He rested his case upon a very serious indictment which had been published by the Agent of the Peninsula and Oriental Company at Suez, and not, as the right hon. Gentleman had said, upon "vague gossip." Further, there was the testimony of the Alexandria correspondent of a public journal, who stated that "the incapacity of the administration of the Company, its utter disregard of justice, and arbitrary proceedings, had rendered the Company thoroughly detested throughout Egypt." That was all the evidence he would trouble the House with at this period of the Session; but he might add that he had received a number of private communications to the same effect, and that a Member of the House largely interested in commerce, and a supporter of the Government, whose name he was not at liberty to mention, had told him that he was perfectly right in his charges and the President of the Board of Trade perfectly wrong. He felt called upon to make this statement because he had been accused, not only by the President of the Board of Trade, but also by the Home Secretary, of bringing charges for which there was no foundation. On this point he had only to add that if the charges were not substantiated by him next Session he would withdraw them. Another matter to which he would briefly refer was the answer given by the Secretary to the Admiralty to some perfectly fair Questions respecting the number of Her Majesty's ships at Madagascar and the Mauritius. He was at a loss to understand why, under some vague fear of offending the French Government, that information was refused. There was nothing of an offensive character in the request. It was a matter in which the country had a deep interest, and the refusal of the Government to furnish the information was one of the most extraordinary, he might say pusillanimous, proceedings ever known in that House. Parliament was kept entirely in the dark as to the facts of these grave and painful incidents, while the Prime Minister made loose and partizan statements out-of-doors. Before the right of moving the adjournment of the House at Question time had been taken away from private Members, no Minister would have ventured to give such an answer.

INDIA—EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS—THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

COMMITTEE. [ADJOURNED DEBATE.]

Order read, for resuming Adjourned Debate on Amendment proposed to Question [22nd August], "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."

And which Amendment was,

To leave out the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "in the interests of India and of the United Kingdom, it is desirable that India should not bear the charge of the Consular and Agency expenditure on the Persian Gulf, and upon the Tigris and Euphrates, and that the concerns of British trade and commerce in Western Asia should be in the hands of officers more completely responsible to the Home Government,"—(Mr. Arthur Arnold.)

—instead thereof.

Question again proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Debate resumed.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL said, he had hoped the Ilbert Bill would not be made a Party question. The emphatic statement of the Prime Minister gave assurance that the Government would not allow the matter to be dealt with in a way that would produce trouble in the future. If the amendment of the law which he supported in India in 1872 had been carried, the present agitation would have been entirely averted. He warmly approved the conduct of Lord Ripon in general, and he was no way to blame in respect to this Bill. He denied that there was any authority for the statement that nine-tenths of the Civil servants of India were against the Bill. He entirely denied that the alarm said to be existing in India was at all of a spontaneous character; it was an artificial alarm created by lawyers, and others no better than lawyers. They were told of telegrams that had been received describing outrages that had been committed on European women. It was now six weeks or two months since those telegrams arrived, and he had searched the Indian papers for some substantiation of them, and had failed to find any. He asserted that the panic among the Europeans in India was ridiculously exaggerated, though, no doubt, a certain amount of panic did exist. They were told that in India people were liable to false charges; but if they had competent Native Judges and magistrates, they were the very men to sift out the truth or falsehood of charges made by the Natives. Before 1833 Natives were entirely without any rights or freedom, and in that year was passed the law that no man should be excluded from any office whatever by reason of his race or colour; and yet they were told that a long course of legislation had exempted Europeans from being subject to the jurisdiction of Natives. The Acts of Parliament passed by the Government of India did not require the Government to choose Natives to fill these appointments whether they were fit or not. They were only Acts removing the legal disqualifications, and enabling the Government to appoint Natives if they thought it desirable to do so. The hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire had asked him whether he would appoint a Native Governor General, and he had replied that under the Act of Parliament a Native was eligible if he was the most fit man—there was nothing in law to prevent it. He (Sir George Campbell) did not think a Native would be the most fit man for a long time to come. In rare instances to appoint Natives to lower positions was not an extreme step, but a very moderate one. They were told that some great authorities were arrayed against this proposal of the Governor

General, and one or two authorities hostile to the measure had been prominently paraded before them, the chief one being the Calcutta High Court. That Court had been for some time out of humour with the Government. The Court had sent home a Protest against the Bill, which he admitted to be as able and as good a case could be made against it. He did not in the least suspect the Chief Justice of being the writer of that Protest—was not in his ultra-bigoted style; but this document had been put forward as well and ably as it was possible to do. He (Sir George Campbell) had examined the Protest with great care, and he found that the Judges did not so much condemn the measure as they—with great elaboration and skill and force he admitted—set themselves to show that the measure was not really necessary, and that for a time it would have been possible to do without it. Well, he was quite willing to admit that if they were prepared to set aside Acts of Parliament requiring them to do these things, that particular measure which he had described, the comparatively small measure that the Government of India proposed might have been postponed for a few years. He did not think that would have done a great deal of harm. If they could have foreseen the success of the agitation which had been got up, notwithstanding the Act of Parliament they might have been able to postpone this matter for a few years until quieter times came about, for there were much more important matters before the Government of India requiring to be dealt with. What he wished to press upon the House and Her Majesty's Government was this—that however it might have been desirable to postpone this measure before things came to the pass at which they were now, after this extreme and unscrupulous agitation which had taken place, it would lead to the greatest practical evil if the Government were to give in. The Government was exercising rightful power in the fulfilment of the Act of Parliament, and it would be an unpardonable thing to give in now. It was only would it be a great evil to give in to a European agitation of this kind, but it would be an enormous evil to yield on account of the example it would give to the Natives of the advantage and power of agitation. The educated Natives were very apt to follow the example which was set them in this matter. They familiarized themselves with our manners and with our literature, and hon. Members heard already of Native agitation being got up on the lines of our European agitations. Like the Irish, they might soon become ungovernable; and he therefore maintained that to teach them this lesson of agitation was an enormous political evil. If they came to govern India as Ireland was governed—if they had agitators in India such as they had in Ireland, and had Native political spouters making such speeches as the House had heard to-night from the opposite Benches, the 250,000,000 people under our sway in India would soon become ungovernable. The 250,000,000 people could never be governed as we were governing the 5,000,000 people of Ireland. It was, therefore, very much on this ground that he specially deprecated yielding to this agitation, and that he expressed his full hope and confidence that the Government would not give way. He had no doubt that when once the thing was done the agitation, though it might, perhaps, last for two or three months, would disappear, and things would settle down, the Europeans finding that they were not in a bit worse position than they were before. The whole thing would be settled in a very short space of time. The Government had expressed their opinion very decidedly, and he hoped they would stick to it. It seemed to him that the opponents of the policy of the Governor General had made the most of one point with regard to the statutory Civil servants. But it must be remembered that what had been done in this respect was due, not to Lord Ripon, but to the Earl of Lytton. Certain appointments which were reserved under the old system for Civil servants sent out to India were in future, upon certain conditions, to be open to Natives of proved merit and ability—these words, “of proved merit and ability,” to be accepted in the ordinary sense. It seemed to him that the intention with which this course was taken had been altogether frustrated. What had been done had not been to offer facilities to Civil servants in lower appointments to rise to the higher positions, but young Native gentlemen of no proved merit or ability, simply on the certificate of their friends and relations that they were promising young men, had been selected. They had been selected because they were well connected. The Court had some justification in saying that this was a class of Civil servants to whom the law never intended that power should be intrusted, and there was on that point some fear that evil consequences might ensue; or, at all events, there was some ground for apprehension. He hoped Her Majesty's Government would maintain intact the proposed law now before the Governor General and Council of India. He trusted they might not make two bites at a cherry; but would, with regard to these questions of jurisdiction, do away with the disabilities of the Natives. They must always, however, endeavour to avoid the appointment of unfit persons to these offices. If there was to be any modification or exception in the law, then, in his opinion, these statutory Civil servants should not be entitled to exercise all the powers of covenanted Civil servants. He fully admitted that most Natives were not equal to Europeans, and he would utter a word of warning. They found in the Engineers' Department, where the appointments involved hard labour, that it was a difficult thing to get the Natives to accept them. Some of the Natives, of course a limited class, had adopted our manners and modes of thought, but had not acquired our backbone. [Laughter.] Hon. Members might laugh, and he might have expressed himself in a laughable manner; but at the same time he was expressing a very serious opinion. For instance, in the matter of local government—and he was all for local government—he had some doubts whether, if they put much political power into the hands of members of the small upper class, who would always be partizans of their own class, they might not, perhaps, find that they had gone a little too fast in this matter. As an illustration of what he meant, he would point to a particular case which had occurred in the present day, and which, he must say, had filled him with very great sorrow. Among that educated class of men in India who were more inclined to be politicians than to be engineers, or to do labourers' work, the most prominent man at the present time was Mr. Banerjee, who had been only lately released from prison, where he had been confined for contempt of Court. He repeated, the case of this man filled him with sorrow and grave doubts as to the political enfranchisement of the Natives. Banerjee was the first Native civilian who came to this country and obtained all the advantages of education, and, by his high talents and passing examinations, and long contact with Europeans, obtained a good position in the Civil Service. He had not only high talents, but also, as he had since abundantly proved, great energy. What happened to him? Why, he deliberately and systematically falsified his records. He subjected the suitors about his Court to difficulties and expense, in a manner which would have been impossible to a European. Moral sense in this man seemed to be utterly wanting. Unwilling as they were to acknowledge that this was the result of the first admission of a Native to the Civil Service, the Government of India and Her Majesty's Government at home were reluctantly compelled to remove this Native gentleman, as he was supposed to be, from the Civil Service for disgraceful conduct. What happened? Why, within a year or two, elective political institutions were granted to Calcutta, and this man had become the most prominent Native politician in the country. He was the most prominent politician in India—posed as the idol and the leading man amongst the party which might be called "Young India." This showed them how careful they must be in making these appointments, and it showed that there was some inequality between the Natives and the Europeans. They had entered upon a new course, and they must begin at the bottom, and gradually work their way up. That was all he had got to say on this particular subject. He hoped he had not detained the House unreasonably, seeing that one Member after another on the opposite side of the House had risen to express opposite views. Having expressed his opinions on these points, he felt it would be a farce to discuss the Indian Budget at this time of the morning. He thought that, able as was the speech of the Under Secretary of State for India (Mr. J. K. Cross), the hon. Member had fallen into the error which was habitual with Under Secretaries for India, and had put the matter in a too much colour de rose shape. Indian finances were not so elastic as the Government seemed to think. We had not established a Surplus upon which we could rely for the accidents or possible debts of the future, and we still relied upon the Opium Revenue, which, long ago, had been admitted to be very precarious. Therefore, he was not prepared to admit that the finances of India were so prosperous as they had been described.

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON: Sir, although the hour and conditions of the House are not propitious, I think it is desirable, after some of the speeches that have been made in this discussion, that I should make one or two observations on the subject of the Criminal Procedure Bill, the more especially as I was the Minister who was responsible for the approval by the Home Government the introduction of that measure. In my opinion, whatever may be the merits and demerits of the measure, Lord Ripon has been, personally, most unfairly and unjustly assailed for the part he has taken in regard to its introduction. I am certain that Lord Ripon is the man who would shrink from any responsibility which properly belongs to him; and not only does he not do so, but he is proud of the part he has taken in many measures which have been initiated by the Government of India, and which have brought upon him considerable unpopularity among the Europeans in India. But when we hear this measure represented, as it has been, as the outcome of Lord Ripon's sentimental policy, the result of his desire to attain popularity among the Natives of India, and of his insane desire for uniformity and to remove all anomalies, I think it is just to Lord Ripon that the facts relating to the introduction of this measure should be brought before Parliament. The introduction of the Bill at the present time is owing to the instrumentality of the Government of Bengal, and of the then Lieutenant Governor, Sir Ashley Eden. I am very much surprised to hear the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stanhope) state that Sir Ashley Eden was not responsible for the Bill introduced. I am very much surprised to hear the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stanhope) state that Sir Ashley Eden was not responsible for the Bill introduced. I am very much surprised to hear the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stanhope) state that Sir Ashley Eden was not responsible for the Bill introduced. I am very much surprised to hear the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stanhope) state that Sir Ashley Eden was not responsible for the Bill introduced.

Sir George Campbell

India in reference to the measure quotes the opinion of the Government of Bengal upon a particular case it had before it, in which Sir Ashley Eden distinctly states the opinion that the time had now arrived when the distinction between Natives and the British officials in these respects ought to be removed, and the attention of the Government of India should be called to the subject. It may be open to him to say he did not recommend the introduction of the Bill; but it so happens that Sir Ashley Eden, coming fresh from India, has a second responsibility in this matter, inasmuch as he was a Member of the Council at home at the time the despatch of the Government of India asking for leave to introduce the Bill was received, and he was a party to the approval which the Home Government gave to the introduction of the measure. It therefore happens that Sir Ashley Eden is responsible in a double sense, and I am at a loss to know what authority the hon. Gentleman the Member for Mid Lincolnshire has for the statement he has made. I must ask the House to consider for a moment the former proceedings with regard to this question. In 1870 a very powerful Commission, which sat in this country for the purpose of revising the Indian Criminal Law, and which included Lords Romilly and Sherbrooke, recommended that further steps should be taken for assimilating the law as regarded Natives and European subjects of the Queen; and they expressed their regret that further progress had not been made in this direction.

Notice taken, that 40 Members were not present; House counted, and 40 Members being found present,

THE MARQUESS OF HARTINGTON, resuming, said: A Bill was introduced in India, in 1872, founded upon the Report of that Commission, and containing provisions which, if not identical, are strictly analogous to those of the measure we are now considering. That Bill was subjected to an examination by a Select Committee of the Legislative Council, and, in consequence of what was at the time avowedly a compromise, the provision extending the powers to try certain cases by Native officials was struck out. The hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stanhope) yesterday alluded to that as a compromise, and added that it was accepted at the time as a permanent settlement of the question. Now, although I am of opinion that it was a compromise, I cannot agree with the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire that it was then accepted, or has ever since been acknowledged, as a permanent settlement. On the contrary, four of the most distinguished Members of the Legislative Council thought it necessary to move an Amendment to the Bill in the Legislative Council, proposing a provision exactly similar to that which we are now discussing. Those four Members not only recorded their votes, but, in speeches, gave their opinions why the compromise which had been arrived at would not be a permanent settlement; and other Members of the Council announced their opinion that it could only be defended as a compromise, and not on broad and general grounds. That was the state of things when the matter was brought by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal under the attention of the Government of India, and before Lord Ripon. Did Lord Ripon force the measure on a reluctant and unwilling Council? His first act was to consult all the Local Governments of India in a despatch which might be said to be almost colourless, and in which he expressed no preferences; and the result of that proceeding is summed up in the 5th paragraph of the despatch of the Government of India now before the House. The substance of that despatch states that, with one exception, there was among the Local Governments of India a universal consensus of opinion that the inequalities and disabilities on Native magistrates ought to be removed, although there was some difference of opinion as to the precise extent to which that measure should go. When the proposal for the introduction of this Bill came to England, it was not necessary for me to overrule a reluctant Council for the purpose of supporting the Government of India. Hon. Members are probably aware of the character of the Council of the Secretary of State in this country. It certainly is not a Council of a Radical or a revolutionary character. If it has a fault it errs, perhaps, too much on the side of prudence and timidity, and it is not at all likely to consent to anything of a revolutionary try cases of all descriptions, a European, when he commits an offence against a Native, can only be tried by a person of his own nationality. Is not that practice likely to raise in the minds of the Natives a suspicion—or, at least, a prejudice against our rule—that we think it necessary, in the interests of our countrymen, to require that they shall have something more than a fair and impartial trial, and that they are to be tried by men who may be presumed to have some bias in their favour? What are the real causes of the opposition to the measure? It may, by some, be thought sufficient to say that the Anglo-Indian, whatever may be his merits—and, no doubt, they are great—is not a person who is distinguished by an exceptionally calm judgment. Agitation of the same character has been seen before, when there was just as little foundation for it. Lord Macaulay, Lord Canning, and other Anglo-Indian statesmen experienced the same kind of opposition from Anglo-Indians; but all these reproaches have recoiled, not against the statesmen with regard to whom they were uttered, but against the persons uttering them themselves. Probably many hon. Members have read the description written by the present Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Trevelyan) of the agitation which arose in India on the passing by Lord Macaulay of what was called the Black Act. The pages to which I refer read as if they had been written about this very agitation. The same alarm was manifested then, and the same prophecies were made; and I doubt not that the result in the present instance will be the same, and that the prophecies which are made will not be fulfilled. I believe that the cause of the prevalent excitement is to be found, not in this measure, but in the general course of policy that has been pursued both by this Government and the late Government. It has been the policy of Governments, for some years past, to impress upon the Government of India the desirability of obtaining the assistance of the Native population, as far as possible, in the government of that country. Over and over again that policy has been inculcated from home. In 1879 a Resolution was passed which limited appointments of the value of 200 rupees a-month to officers of the Army and to Natives.

That restriction has been rigidly enforced, and has met with all kinds of opposition from non-official classes of Europeans, who think that all the appointments ought to be reserved for them. The same spirit was shown when it was determined that admission to the Engineering College at Roorkee should be confined to Natives. I do not say that the agitation has been got up entirely by the lawyers; but I could quote passages in letters in the Indian papers in which it is admitted that the agitation was directed against the policy of the Home Government in providing appointments for Native civilians, while there were many Europeans without appointments. The policy of Her Majesty's Government is, in my opinion, founded upon considerations of the most practical character. Whatever differences of opinion there may be, there can, in my opinion, be very little doubt that India is insufficiently governed at the present time. I believe there are many districts of India in which the number of officials is altogether insufficient, and that is owing to the fact that the Indian Revenue would not bear the strain if a sufficient number of Europeans were appointed. The Government of India cannot afford to spend more than they do on the administration of the country; and if the country is to be better governed, that can only be done by the employment of the best and most intelligent of the Natives in the Service. There is a further reason, in my opinion, why this policy should be adopted, and that is that it is not wise to educate the people of India, to introduce among them your civilization, and your progress, and your literature, and, at the same time, to tell them they shall never have any chance of taking any part or share in the administration of the affairs of their country, except by their getting rid, in the first instance, of their European Rulers. Surely, it would not be wise to tell a patriotic Native of India that. The hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire said that it was the policy of the Romans to carry the privilege of Roman citizenship wherever they went. That is, in my opinion, precisely what we are trying to do by this policy; we are attempting to extend to a few of the best Natives of India the full privileges of British citizenship; we are attempting to bring a few of them within the rights and powers and privileges of governing themselves as they might be able to govern themselves under a Native Administration; and if it is wise to attempt to do this, surely it is wise to trust to them thoroughly and to invest them with all the powers necessary to place them on an equality with those with whom they are equal. No doubt, the discussion which has taken place may lead to some reconsideration of the details of the Bill; and although all the Reports have not been received from the Local Governments, I believe the majority of them are of opinion that the withdrawal of the Bill will be an error. At the same time, the Government of India will be quite prepared to give every consideration to any reasonable suggestion that may be made for the amendment of the Bill, though they hold that the withdrawal of the measure in deference to the agitation would be an error, and a very fatal one. I do not wish to speak disrespectfully, but much of the agitation has proceeded from the non-official class in India; and I must point out that they are not responsible for the government of the country. It is the Government of India alone that is responsible for the government of that country; and, if this measure is to be withdrawn in deference to an agitation of that sort, I have no hesitation in saying that the Government of India must be altogether revised. If we are going to invest a class, now under no responsibility, with the power of interposing a veto upon legislation which is thought necessary and wise by the Government of India, we must devise some mode of revising the form of government so as to invest them with responsibility. I wish to say, in conclusion, that I am unwilling that this debate should terminate without Lord Ripon being assured that he has heartily, fully, and completely the support of his Colleagues at home who have assented to the introduction of the Bill.

MR. ARTHUR ARNOLD: I beg to withdraw my Amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Main Question, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," put, and agreed to.

ACCOUNTS considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

The Marquess of Hartington

Resolved, That it appears, by the Accounts laid before this House, that the Ordinary Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1882, was £62,913,743; the Revenue from Productive Public Works, including the Net Traffic Receipts from Guaranteed Companies, was £10,782,063, making the total Revenue of India for that year £73,695,806; that the Ordinary Expenditure in India and in England, including Charges for the Collection of the Revenue, for Ordinary Public Works, and for Interest on Debt, exclusive of that for Productive Public Works, was £61,464,074; the Expenditure on Productive Public Works (Working Expenses and Interest), including the payments to Guaranteed Companies for Interest and Surplus Profits, was £9,649,005, making a total Charge for that year of £71,113,079; that there was an excess of Revenue over Expenditure in that year of £2,582,727; that the Capital Expenditure on Productive Public Works in the same year was £2,269,861; and that there was also a Capital Outlay on the East Indian Railway of £1,041,563, including £586,300 India 3½ per cent. Stock, and £455,263 redemption of portion of the East India Railway Annuity.

Resolution reported, and agreed to.

MR. WADDY said, there was one question he wished to ask, and only one. He wished to know from the Government whether anything had ever been done to replace the Famine Fund? It would be remembered that one of the most disgraceful Governments that India ever had—he meant Lord Lytton's—had extorted by extraordinary pressure from the people of India large sums of money, about £1,500,000, for the Famine Fund, and, having given the most fulsome pledges of the honour of Great Britain that they would not spend it on anything but Famine Works had spent every penny of it on gunpowder. He wished to know whether anything had been done to replace that money?

MR. J. K. CROSS said, that part of the sum had been expended on Famine Relief, and the rest on Protective Works and the payment of Debt.

QUESTION.

SOUTH AFRICA—ZULULAND.

SIR HENRY HOLLAND said, he should like to ask, with a view of relieving anxiety, whether the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Hartington) could give any more important information as to whether the Government intended to do anything to what

HOUSE OF LORDS,

Friday, 24th August, 1883.

JUDICIAL BUSINESS.

Ordered, That this House do meet on Tuesday the 13th day of November next for the purpose of hearing and determining Appeals and matters connected therewith, pursuant to the provisions of the "Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876"; and that during such meeting of the House leave be given to the Appeal Committee to meet and appoint their own Chairman.

PARLIAMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE — REPRINTING OF BILLS AMENDED ON THIRD READING.

RESOLUTION.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL said, he desired to call attention to a matter which might seem of small importance, but which affected the procedure of the House and the convenience of their Lordships. It would be remembered that on the third reading of the Agricultural Holdings Bill many important Amendments were introduced in that House. He found on inquiry that it had not hitherto been the custom of that House to reprint Bills with the Amendments introduced on the third reading. They were always reprinted when Amendments were made on the Report, which greatly facilitated reference to what had been done. But when a Bill went down to the House of Commons after third reading with Amendments, there was no reprint and no means of access to the Bill in the form in which it left that House. Thus it was almost impossible to understand and follow the alterations made. He therefore ventured to move, though he had not given Notice of it, that it be an Order of that House that Bills amended on he Third Reading in that House should be always reprinted.

Moved, "That Bills amended on Third Reading in this House be always reprinted as amended."—(The Duke of Argyll.)

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, he entirely agreed with the noble Duke as to the great inconvenience which was recently felt. He thought that such an Order was necessary for practical purposes—that was to say, it would cause a permanent record to be made of the state in which every Bill left their Lordships' House.

Motion agreed to.

FRANCE—SPEECH OF M. WADDINGTON, THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR.

QUESTION.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY: I wish to ask the noble Earl opposite, the Leader of the House, a Question, of which I have given him private Notice. I wish to ask him, Whether he is able to state, from any communications that have reached him, how far a speech attributed in the French newspapers to the French Ambassador, which has attracted a good deal of attention both here and abroad, is genuine?

EARL GRANVILLE: My Lords, I am happy to be able to give a complete answer to the Question of the noble Marquess, because, in the course of conversation I had with M. Waddington, the French Ambassador incidentally referred to this case as an instance of how reports totally without foundation are sometimes circulated.

PARLIAMENT—PRIVILEGE—BRADLAUGH v. CLARKE.

OBSERVATIONS.

LORD DENMAN said, he had to trouble their Lordships with two cases relating to the Privilege of their Lordships' House. In the first case, he found that a Scotch newspaper—The Edinburgh Courier—had reported two speeches, one by the noble Lord the Chairman of Committees and another by himself, on a clause—afterwards withdrawn—proposed for the Scottish Peersage Bill. This clause and these speeches were wholly ignored by The Times. They related to a majority of a quorum of three Law Lords over-ruling a majority of a Committee of Privileges. He believed that any Peer attending the whole of the proceedings was fully entitled to vote; indeed, in one case, that of the father of the late Sir William Knollys, the minority, who had attended the whole of the proceedings, were more entitled to vote than a majority of Law Lords and Peers, who only heard part of the case; and three illustrious Royal Dukes—Kent, Sussex, and Gloucester—joined in signing a Protest by Lord Erskine against that Judgment. The only reason why noble Lords did not vote upon the O'Connell case was their not having heard the arguments; and the first Lord Wharfedale expressly advised their Lordships not to vote, "in order to retain the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords." With regard to the Bradlaugh case, he had heard the whole of the case, and had soon given his judgment, or opinion, as some called it, to the Lord Chancellor, but had not been allowed to see the decisions of the other noble Lords before their delivery. He found, also, that his name was not in the rota, and that his words were not in the law reports; and he contended that his presence should be noted in the Journals of their Lordships' House. He brought these cases forward, not for his own sake, but for the serious consideration of their Lordships.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS (ENGLAND) BILL.—(No. 220.)

(The Lord President.)

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS' REASON.

Commons reason for disagreeing to Lord further amendment considered (as going to order).

following is the said reason:—

The Commons disagree to the amendment now proposed by the Lords in page 2, line 11, (in lieu of the amendment to which the Commons disagreed) for the following reason:

"Because all cases to which the proviso will apply are covered by the provisions of clause 5, sub-section (c), and to insert this proviso in clause 2 will be misleading."

LORD CARLINGFORD (Lord President of the Council) said, with respect to the only point now at issue between the two Houses, he had to move that the House do not insist upon the further amendment on Clause 2. The balance of opinion in that House was as nearly as possible equal upon the Amendment, and it was sent back to the other House in a hesitating and accidental fashion. The noble Marquess opposite (the Marquess of Salisbury), had said that he looked with suspicion and jealousy on the 6th clause, to which the Government naturally pointed as meaning the case which his Proviso had in view; that he desired to remove all ambiguity—conclusion, under the best legal advice at their disposal, that the dangers the noble Marquess had in his mind were not really to be feared. They believed that no such ambiguity existed, and they were also instructed that to introduce the Proviso would have a very misleading and possibly mischievous effect, and raise serious doubts as to the effect of Clause 6. He, therefore, moved that their Lordships do not insist on the Amendment.

Moved, "Not to insist on the said Amendment."—(The Lord President.)

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, he was once again impressed with the fact that the influence of these estimable and valuable Members of their Lordships' House to whom Charles Fox once gave the name of "the Janissaries of the Bed Chamber," increased every hour as they approached the end of the Session. It was very strong on Wednesday last, and it was stronger now. As far as he was concerned he fully recognized that they were his masters, and he, therefore, had no intention of dividing the House, although he had no doubt what the result would be. But he could not allow the Question to be put without calling their Lordships' attention to the case advanced at the present stage of the Bill by the Government and the House of Commons, to the evils it indicated, and to the extreme uncertainty of the Bill. The noble Lord opposite told him that the 6th clause obviated all the evils he feared. As far as a layman could read that clause, he was not the least of the noble Lord's opinion. He had had an opportunity, like the noble Lord, of consulting very high legal authority indeed, and his views were confirmed by that legal authority; so that, at all events, they had a pretty tangle for the Judges to untie. But what he wished to call attention to was the cause of this ambiguity, for which they had not far to seek. It would have been perfectly easy to have made a clear and straightforward Bill, which would have been intelligible and, therefore, acceptable to both sides as avoiding the danger of litigation; but the Government had been afraid to state distinctly what their object and intention was, because they had two sets of people to satisfy. Their object was to pass their Bill without driving on the one side the Radicals to despair, or without removing all hope from the Conservatives; and, therefore, they had drawn an ambiguous Bill, which to the unlearned, and probably the learned, judgment conveyed a very doubtful meaning. The noble Lord opposite thought the 6th clause would prevent a tenant who, by implied or express promise, had bound himself to make improvements from claiming compensation for those improvements. He, however, did not agree with the noble Lord; but, even if that were so, he asked why could not the thing have been plainly stated in the Bill? Again, it was very doubtful whether the landlord and tenant were capable of agreeing beforehand with respect to the rate of interest and other matters. The clause was, in fact, utterly ambiguous. The Government contended that the view taken by him was covered by that clause; but why could not a plain and satisfactory statement have been made of what it was desired by the Bill to indicate? Then they had the question of cottage gardens. The Lord Chancellor at first thought they were within the scope of the Bill, but more lately had come to the conclusion that they were not. What security had they that the Judges would not take the last instead of the first of the two strong opinions which the noble and learned Earl had given? Why was it not possible to put a plain statement into the Bill that cottage gardens were not included in its provisions? Then, again, they had the question of a "fair and reasonable compensation." No human being knew what that meant, or whether that clause would include the ordinary agreements in which compensation was measured by the outlay of the tenant, or whether those agreements would be declared contrary to the spirit of the Bill. It would have been perfectly easy to have drawn a plain straightforward Bill that would have given to the tenant the outlay that he had made upon the land, and given it him without doubt or litigation. The evil of that fantastic system of valuing which the Government had adopted, and which had never been tried, and in many cases probably could never be applied, would tend to cause doubts and differences, and would plunge the two parties into litigation, and would impose serious costs upon them. It would, besides, force the landlords to take precautions, and so diminish the good understanding between the parties which existed at present. He was not making these observations in the interest of the landlord, for, if they took it from that point of view, litigation was the interest of the stronger man, who would in all probability win. The result of the obscurity of this Act, then, would be that it would impose so many charges on the tenant that he would in the end be afraid to appeal to it. His objection to the Bill was this—that, for the sake of satisfying Parliamentary exigencies, ambiguities had been admitted into the Bill, which would bear with oppressive weight on the cultivators of the land, which would baulk them of their just demands, and which, by setting up doubts and differences between landlords and tenants, would tend to multiply precautions by which all that hearty co-operation between the two would be sensibly diminished, and instead of which a spirit of estrangement and jealousy would grow up. He deeply lamented this result, and he held Her Majesty's Government and the Parliamentary exigencies to which they had bowed responsible for it.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, it seemed to him that not for Party or Parliamentary reasons, not for reasons tending to separate and put against each other the two great classes concerned, but for reasons equally relating to the mutual interest of both those classes and tending to diminish difficulty and friction between them, and not to increase it, some such measure as that Bill was necessary. He admitted that the less legislation they had about social relations the better; but when circumstances arose which rendered some legislation of that kind necessary and desirable, the best thing they could do was to make it moderate, fair, and reasonable; and he thought the general expression of opinion, not only "elsewhere," but also among their Lordships, had been that the present Bill, on the whole, fulfilled that character. It appeared to him that the noble Marquess was disposed to lay down an impossible standard for that kind of legislation; for he seemed to think that they must define everything, down to the smallest details, and with a complete foresight of all the circumstances that might possibly arise, by Act of Parliament. His own impression was that any attempt to do so would be constantly found to defeat its own object. Their definitions would not truly anticipate all the variety of circumstances and of conditions which might present themselves. At every point there would arise questions as to those things concerning which the Act was silent or imperfectly expressed, because it was quite impossible to anticipate and express everything. In regard to the particular criticisms of the noble Marquess, he would first observe that as to the test of value, which the noble Marquess thought a mistake, and to which he preferred the test of outlay, he must be aware, if he had followed the advice of the noble Duke (the Duke of Richmond and Gordon) and had read the Report of the Royal Commission, that the Royal Commissioners recommended the test of the difference of value resulting at the time of quitting from the tenant's improvements in preference to the test of outlay. And he could not but think that the noble Marquess would see that both the landlord and the incoming tenant, that test would be more satisfactory; because if the actual outlay made by the tenant in good faith was not also made with good judgment, and did not result in a profit either to the landlord or to the incoming tenant, it seemed manifest that the landlord and the incoming tenant would frequently be paying for that from which they got no benefit. He did not mean to say that to determine what was the value to a new tenant, or to the landlord, of an improvement effected on a farm might not sometimes be a matter of some doubt or difficulty; but the danger, if any, was that the valuers would be likely to fall back on the criterion of outlay as the test of value rather than they should make a mistake in the opposite direction; and that would, so far, be doing the very thing which he understood the noble Marquess to say ought to be the general rule. The noble Marquess inadvertently on the absence from the 8th clause of a definition of what terms in an agreement would be fair and reasonable. Now, in the nature of things, it was impossible to define beforehand what the parties might desire to agree upon, and that the law would be the best guide.

give him. When the parties had agreed bona fide and deliberately on any terms, those who objected to any such terms, on the ground that they were unfair and unreasonable, would have to show that they were so. It was possible that they might be unfair and unreasonable; and it would not be right to say, if that was the case, that they should prevail over the general rule. It was not unusual to leave questions of that kind to valuers and, if necessary, to lawyers, and there did not occur to his mind any other or better way by which the object could be accomplished. He pleaded guilty to being at first a little perplexed on the question whether cottage gardens might not possibly be capable of being held to be let for agricultural purposes. He did not think it was probable; but he thought that a question of that kind might possibly be raised. When, however, he carefully examined the terms of the clause which excluded all land that was not let either for agricultural or pastoral uses, or as a market garden, it became evident to him, from the mention of market gardens as a third category, that a market garden was not held to be let for agricultural purposes; and in that way he had satisfied himself that no serious doubt on the point could arise, as a cottage garden could not be held to be so on any ground which would not apply to a market garden with equal or greater force. Then, as to drainage, he was surprised that the noble Marquess suggested that as the clause stood it was uncertain whether the landlord and the tenant might agree as to the terms on which, by common consent, a work of drainage should be executed. He did not see how the clause could be made clearer on that subject. As finally amended it did not seem to be at all ambiguous. The only point that remained was the particular Amendment which was not now, he was happy to hear, to be pressed by the noble Marquess. He did not call in question the intention with which that Amendment was conceived; but he would point out that not only by the close division of opinion which was shown among their Lordships on the subject was the House of Commons justified in not accepting it, but the very fact that it was proposed at the last moment, and came upon them as a surprise, indicated either that the words from which the Commons had disagreed were not necessary, or that they might have produced inconveniences which were not intended or foreseen by the noble Marquess. The 6th clause was couched in general terms, having the same general intention as the Act of 1875. It applied both to present and future tenancies; and to introduce a different rule expressed in different terms, but intended to give effect to the same principle as to past tenancies, on the ground that the terms of the 6th clause were too wide or not sufficiently clear, would be rather casting a reflection on the 6th clause than improving the 2nd. Moreover, the introduction of the words "implied as well as expressed" in the noble Marquess's Amendment might have given rise to disputes, because it was more easy to construe an expressed intention than to determine something that was not expressed, but only to be implied. He trusted that none of the inconvenience which the noble Marquess suggested would be found to arise from the clause; but of one thing he was sure—that it had been framed deliberately, not with any view, as the noble Marquess had supposed, to satisfy two opposite sections—not with any view to Parliamentary or Party objects, but simply with a bona fide desire to do equal justice to both of the great classes who were concerned.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL said, he considered that the remarks of the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack were of a re-assuring character, and he was glad to recognize the spirit which they displayed. He was also glad to hear that the Amendment of the noble Marquess was not to be pressed. He thought that the Government had shown a fair disposition to resist extreme views on the question of agricultural legislation. They were much pressed in "another place" to adopt provisions which he thought would have involved a very great invasion of the rights of property, and a great upsetting of the existing relations between landlord and tenant, and a serious injury to the prospects of agriculture. These provisions had been resisted by the Government, involving Divisions which showed considerable differences of opinion in the Liberal Party. Therefore, on the whole, he did not see reason to complain of the course which the Government had pursued with regard to that Bill. He did not, however, rise to defend the Government for that Bill, but simply to express an earnest hope that their Lordships, in so far as they represented the landlords of this country, would endeavour to work that Bill in a liberal spirit. The second Irish Land Act was excused and defended on the allegation—in his opinion, to a great extent, the unfounded allegation—that the Irish landlords had worked the previous Land Act of 1870 in a jealous and unworthy spirit. He had read carefully the evidence taken by the Bessborough Commission, and also that taken by the Commission of which the noble Duke (the Duke of Richmond and Gordon)—not now present—was the head; and he was unable to find satisfactory evidence in proof of that accusation against the Irish landlords; but it was an accusation that was quite sure to be made, and it was made an excuse for the second Irish Land Act. He hoped that the landlords of England and Scotland would remember that fact, and not suffer themselves to fall into such a trap. He believed it would be possible to work the Bill to the satisfaction of both landlords and tenants. But it was impossible to deny that measures of that kind, introducing relations by statute instead of those which had been hitherto regulated by free contract, produced new dangers and created fresh motives to which both parties might be tempted to give way. He hoped their Lordships would not allow themselves to be tempted in that manner, and that they would work the Bill in a liberal spirit, so that it would be impossible to say of them that they had not acted with a fair and reasonable compliance with its provisions. He would venture to suggest to their Lordships, having had experience of these matters, that with regard to the important details concerning the rights of tenants to compensation for manorial value of the land and other improvements, that those rights should not be made among the general conditions of a lease. He remembered a remarkable speech made two or three years ago by a former Lord Advocate. He had always regarded a successful lawyer as an omniscient being; but he read that speech with great surprise. The right hon. and learned Gentleman took one of the printed conditions which were common on estates in Scotland, and were very convenient to both parties. "This," said the right hon. and learned Gentleman, "is what is called free contract. Can it be called free contract when all the conditions are printed?" A most absurd question could not have been asked by an intelligent man; but yet the great majority of those persons who were present, utterly ignorant as they generally were of the principles upon which landed property was managed, cheered him to the echo. He might well have asked if it was free contract that they could go to a sale and find the conditions of sale printed on paper. He quite admitted that they should not generally put into this mere printed or legal form anything but the universal and stereotyped condition of lease, and with regard to these detailed arrangements for compensation for manorial value and other improvement which almost necessarily varied in each individual case—with regard to the conditions he thought generally they should be written agreements in each case. With this protection, he thought they could work the Bill with perfect success, provided it was done, not in spirit of narrow jealousy, but taking care that they were really desirous to give to the tenants everything they desired to have that was perfectly fair and just within the spirit of this Bill.

LORD BRAMWELL said, that, in his opinion, the Amendment of the noble Marquess was by no means unnecessary in consequence of the provisions of Clause 6. He would have said that the case was too plain for argument had not his noble and learned Friend on the Woolsack taken a different view. When it was said that it was impossible beforehand to be precise, that was true to a certain extent; but it was also true that to a certain extent they could be precise. He thought it was their duty to lay down their laws intelligibly; and it was clear that the Act was not so plain as it might be, as his noble and learned Friend and himself took different views.

LORD DENMAN said, he must make a final protest against the Bill. He felt sure that if there were a conference between the two Houses the mischievous character of the Bill would be made manifest. He believed that the Act of 1875 was far better and more certain than the present one. So far from being a panacea for their evils, the Bill would throw the apple of discord among landlords and tenants. He believed there would have been no misfortune in throwing out the Bill. It was passed with haste, and with haste that might have been avoided.

THE EARL OF WEMYSS: My Lords, I greatly regret that my noble Friend the Leader of the Opposition does not feel himself in a position to stand to his Amendment. No doubt, his position, as described by himself, is most unfortunate, and worthy of commiseration, for he has told us that he is deserted by his troops, and left at the mercy of what he calls the "Janissaries" of the Government; and the loss of the Amendment is the more to be regretted as, after what has fallen from my noble Friend (Lord Bramwell), it is evident that the 6th clause, unless the Amendment be maintained, will be a fruitful source of litigation. But we are told that by insisting upon the Amendment your Lordships will lose the Bill. Speaking for myself, I should view its loss as so much gain, and I hardly think that your Lordships have fully taken in all the bearings of the measure. I have, however, here a summary of its provisions, which I have carefully made out, and which, I think, will clearly show how manifold and great are the evil principles contained in this so-called moderate Bill. By Clause 1, rights previously non-existent are created, and given as a "boon" or bribe to the present tenant at the cost of the future tenant or landlord. Under Clauses 1 to 7, State agreements are imposed in the place of private contracts. By Clause 4, the rate of interest for money is actually fixed by statute. By Clauses 8 to 27, State arbitrations and Courts are enforced, from which, in certain cases, no appeal is allowed; and a scale of costs is prescribed. By Clause 34, rights of property are transferred from the owner to the occupier. In Clause 41, a reduction of rent is prescribed in certain named cases; and Clauses 44 to 52 limit the powers of recovering debts. Further, the Bill empowers the tenant to drain land against the will of his landlord. And, generally, the measure bars all feu agreements in the future; breaks them—even 19 years' leases—in the past; while it tends to the direct encouragement of fraud. Such, my Lords, is an accurate summary of the Bill; and it must, I think, be admitted that we have here abundant evil, protoplasmic provisions, capable, when Party expediency demands, of indefinite extension and universal application. Now, how comes it that a measure such as this has passed through both Houses of Parliament without opposition? How is it that the Liberals are thus garrotting liberty, and the Conservatives failing to conserve property? It is due, my Lords, not to any belief in the soundness of the principles of the Bill, but to Party needs, and the supposed moderation of the measure. "For God's sake pass the Bill, lest worse befall us!" That is the chief argument one hears urged in its favour, and, to say the least, it is not a very brave course, nor likely, in the long run, to ward off the dreaded danger. Why, what is this vain endeavour to find security in the provisions and folds of this Bill, but a repetition of the policy of that foolish feathered denizen of the desert, which, when pursued, hides its head for safety in the sand. Now, my Lords, I venture to think that the Conservatives have thrown away a great chance. What was it that brought them the last time into Office? Harassed interests. And now, again, ever since they returned to power, we have had the Liberals at their old game, harassing one great interest after another. At one time the manufacturer; at another the shipowner, who is scolded, threatened, and put into the corner like a naughty child by the President of the Board of Trade; and here we have the landed interest inequitably treated by this Bill. Why, my Lords, the fact is that the Liberals have divorced their old, true, faithful love and spouse, Liberty, and have, as the phrase is, "taken up" with Socialism, that painted social evil, whose falsehood and rottenness all history proclaims. Well, here the Liberals have, as I said, given their opponents a chance—they have thus fairly exposed their flank; and the Conservatives have failed to take advantage of their errors. For of this I feel assured, that, however Socialistic may be the present tendency of legislation, there is in the English nation, and in the Anglo-Saxon race, such an innate love of liberty, and so much self-reliance, that in the long run the people of this country will rally round the Party in the State that firmly takes its stand upon, and in defence of, individual liberty. Had, therefore, the Conservatives stood firmly as the champions of free contract; had they manfully resisted the breaking of existing agreements, they might possibly have lost the support of a very few agitating political tenant farmers, but they would have thus secured the respect of all steady-going agriculturists, and the confidence of the commercial community. And now, my Lords, a word upon the consequences of the measure. The noble Duke who spoke behind the Treasury Bench (the Duke of Argyll) expressed a hope that there might, after the passing of this measure, be peace and kindly feeling between landlord and tenant. I trust so too. But I am bound to state my belief that the consequences of this Bill will be distrust, enmity, litigation; the shortening of, if not the doing away altogether with, leases; the taking of farms in hand by owners wherever possible; and, generally, the checking of agricultural improvements. Such, then, is the view I take of the Bill; and as regards the Amendment, I look upon it as the only one worth fighting for, because it is the only Amendment that has any shred of principle in it. And now, my Lords, I have only to thank your Lordships for having allowed me to make these remarks upon the Bill; and, in conclusion, I would say this—that I shall ever look back with satisfaction upon the fact that I have from the outset, alike before my constituents and in my place in Parliament, consistently and persistently denounced and opposed, to the best of my ability, all legislation of this kind, which I believe to be fraught with evil, not only to landlord and tenant, but to all classes of the community, and, if persevered in, ultimately fatal to the well-being of this great commercial people.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS REASON.

Commons reason for disagreeing to Lords further amendment considered (according to order).

The Earl of Wemyss

The following is the said reason:—The Commons disagree to the amendment now proposed by the Lords in page 2, line 3, in lieu of the Amendment to which the Commons disagree for the following reason:—

“Because all cases to which the proviso will apply are covered by the provisions of clause (a), and to insert this proviso in clause 2 will be misleading.”

On the Motion of The Lord President the said Amendment not insisted on.

STREET TRAFFIC (METROPOLIS)—
HAMILTON PLACE, PICCADILLY.
OBSERVATIONS.

EARL FORTESCUE said, he wished to call the attention of the House to the obstruction which, particularly during the months of May, June, and the early part of July, was notoriously caused to and by, the traffic coming out of Hamilton Place into Piccadilly. The obstruction had produced serious inconvenience and he had already called attention to the subject some time ago. But he wished to do so again, before it became too late to apply a remedy which would cost little now, while the work was still unfinished, but would be much more expensive hereafter. He had now fortified his own opinion as to the right remedy by that of the best practical authorities he could conceive on the point—namely, that of some of those policemen who had discharged, in turn the duty of managing the traffic therewith so much tact and good humour. One of these had told him, evidently quite unconscious of his questioner being a legislator, that, when talking over their difficulties with his comrades, they all agreed the right thing to do was to widen Piccadilly gradually from opposite Park Lane, so as to get room for another double line of carriages opposite Hamilton Place. Practically, all the traffic down Hamilton Place went Westward or Southward, and, by the rule of the road, was obliged to cross, and therefore interrupt, the great flow of traffic Eastward along Piccadilly. But if space were given to the traffic or emerging from Hamilton Place to turn Westward at once, it would have opportunities, in the much widened space beyond, for joining its proper line either Southward or Westward, without much interrupting the traffic Eastward, by crossing it where, so to speak, its line had got loosened in the wide spaces; as their experience had taught them traffic always did under such circumstances. He called upon the Government, which was always boasting of its economy, to make cheaply now an improvement which he was sure would have to be made before long at much greater cost.

LORD THURLOW: My Lords, I have absolutely no new information to impart to the noble Lord in reference to the Question he has just brought forward; but I will take care to bring it to the notice of the First Commissioner of Works, from whom, no doubt, it will receive full consideration. The noble Lord, I believe, admits that very great improvements have been made; that is universally admitted; but as those improvements are not yet completed, it is rather premature to judge at present of the results which will ensue from them. Early next Session, however, we may be able to judge better what improvements, if any, may be desirable to relieve the congested districts in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly.

DEATH OF THE COMTE DE CHAMBORD.

QUESTION.

LORD BRAYE inquired, Whether any further information had been received by the Government respecting the death of the Comte de Chambord?

EARL GRANVILLE: When I inquired at the Foreign Office, no information had been received beyond the Reuter's telegram announcing the fact, which I believe has been published this afternoon.

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT— HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

THE PARLIAMENT was this day prorogued by Commission.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR acquainted the House that Her Majesty had been pleased to grant two several Commissions, one for declaring Her Royal Assent to several Bills agreed upon by both Houses of Parliament, and the other for proroguing the Parliament:—And the LORDS COMMISSIONERS—namely, The LORD CHANCELLOR; HER MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (The Earl of Derby); The LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD (The Earl Sydney); The LORD CHAMBERLAIN (The Earl of Kenmare); and The LORD MONSON (Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard)—being in their Robes, and seated on a Form between the Throne and the Woolsack; and the COMMONS being come, with their Speaker, and the Commission to that purpose being read, the ROYAL ASSENT was given to several Bills.

Then THE LORD CHANCELLOR, pursuant to Her Majesty's Command, delivered HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH, as follows:—

“ My Lords, and Gentlemen,

“ In releasing you from your protracted labours, I use the occasion to acknowledge your unremitting energy and devotion in the fulfilment of the great trust committed to you.

“ The harmony of my relations with foreign Governments continues to be undisturbed.

“ The Conference, assembled in London for the settlement of various questions connected with the free navigation of the Danube, has, by the conciliatory attitude of the countries represented in it, arrived at an agreement favourable to commerce.

“ The work of administrative re-organization in Egypt, though retarded at important points by the visitation of cholera, has steadily advanced.

“ The aim of the temporary occupation of the country by my military forces, the considerations which must supply the measure of its duration, and the constant direction of my efforts to the maintenance of established rights, to the tranquillity of the East, and to the welfare of the Egyptian people, have been more than once explained to you, and they remain unchanged.

“ Occurrences arising out of the French operations in Madagascar form the subject of communications with the Government of France, which, conducted in the spirit of friendship, will, I doubt not, lead to satisfactory results. In connection with these occurrences, my attention has been, and will continue to be, steadily directed to all which may affect the rights or liberties of my subjects.

“ My hopes for the re-establishment of stable peace and order in Zululand have not as yet been fulfilled, and the working of the Convention with the Transvaal Government has proved, in certain respects, to be far from satisfactory.

“ In regard to the first, I shall, while avoiding all gratuitous interference, study to maintain such engagements as I have contracted, and keep steadily in view the security of the border of Natal.

“ The questions of frontier policy opened by the second, which in different forms have for so long a time constituted the main difficulty in the administration of my South African Possessions, will, with other points, shortly be discussed in this country between my Ministers and the confidential Envoys who are to be dispatched from the Transvaal for the purpose.

“ Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

“ I thank you for the liberal supplies by which you have enabled me to make adequate provision for the public estabishments and other services of the country during the current year.

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"The Revenue has thus far not fallen short of its anticipated amount; the condition of the classes suffering from the depression of agriculture has, in most districts of the country, shown some degree of improvement; and the general state of trade and industry is sound.

"I can refer with greater satisfaction than on some former occasions to the condition of Ireland. Except in regard to the disposal of Appeals, where there is still much to be desired, the action of the appointed Tribunals has brought into wide operation the provisions of the Land Act; the late combination against the fulfilment of contracts, especially for rent, has been in a great degree broken up; there is a marked diminution of agrarian crime; and associations, having murder for their object, have been checked by the detection and punishment of offenders.

"The expectations of more successful progress in the work of legislation, which I expressed to you at the close of the last Session of Parliament, have not been wholly disappointed; and I have cordially given my assent to many measures of public usefulness.

"The Acts, which secure due compensation to improving occupiers of land in England and Scotland respectively, and comprise other valuable provisions, will, I trust, tend alike to the promotion of confidence between classes, and to the more advantageous prosecution of the great business of agriculture.

"The new Law relating to corrupt practices at elections will not only tend towards extinguishing the grosser forms of mischief, at which it is particularly aimed, but will, by reducing the expense of Parliamentary Elections, give increased freedom of choice to the Constituencies, and thus promote the more efficient representation of all classes in the great Council of the nation.

"The Act for the improvement of the Law of Bankruptcy appears well adapted to fulfil the favourable anticipations with which it has been received by the commercial and trading community; and the Act concerning Patents will be found greatly to improve the position of inventors, in whose ingenuity and resource the public has a substantial interest.

"The provision which you have made for further securing a continuous redemption of the National Debt will materially aid the maintenance of the public credit.

"The Act for the encouragement of Irish industry and enterprise by improvement of communications, and for the further relief of particular districts by emigration and migration, supplies a new proof of your anxiety to promote the prosperity of Ireland.

"The remission of Parliamentary labour which you have so amply earned will bring with it the discharge of important duties, both personal and public, in your respective districts. Alike in these, and in the arduous exertions which may be demanded from you in coming Sessions, I trust that the favour of Providence may uniformly guide [you to promote the object of my constant solicitude—the welfare and happiness of my people."

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Monday the twelfth day of November next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Monday the twelfth day of November next.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Saturday, 25th August, 1883.

The House met at half after One of the clock.

LABOURERS' (IRELAND) ACT.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, If he has any objection to direct the Local Government Board to issue a circular to the various local bodies in Ireland, pointing out their powers under the Labourers' (Ireland) Act, explaining its provisions, and offering suggestions as to how those provisions can be carried into effect?

MR. TREVELYAN: The Local Government Board will forward a copy of the Act to each sanitary authority, and call their attention to its provisions, and they will be at all times ready to give advice and assistance to any sanitary authority requiring it; but the duties and powers of such authorities under the Act are very clearly and fully defined, and it does not appear to be either necessary or desirable to make any general suggestions. If the hon Member will speak to me afterwards, perhaps he may tell me some reasons on which we might ground the issue of a Circular.

RUSSIA—THE EXPULSION OF JEWS FROM ST. PETERSBURGH.

MR. MONTAGU SCOTT asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, If he has received information from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburg, with respect to the expulsion from Russia of a British subject, furnished with an English Foreign Office passport only fourteen days' old, the representative of Messrs. Raphael Tuck, of London, on account of his religion; and, if Her Majesty's Government have taken any steps to induce the Russian Government to extend to Jews the rights stipulated by treaty to all Her Majesty's subjects of whatever denomination?

LORD EDMOND FITZMAURICE: Yes, Sir; the information which the Secretary of State has received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires is to the effect that on the 13th instant, Mr. Marcuse called at the British Consulate with his passport endorsed by the police, "British subject, a Jew, forbidden to reside in St. Petersburg." The acting Consul explained the regulations, and offered to go with him to the Prefect of Police to obtain permission for him to remain about three weeks for business purposes. Mr. Marcuse, however, said that he only cared to remain three days, and declined to ask any favour of the Russian authorities. Mr. Marcuse made no further application to the Consulate and none at all to the Embassy. He remained four days at St. Petersburg, and left for Warsaw on the 16th instant. Since the receipt of this information Messrs. Tuck have asked the Secretary of State to obtain for their representative a permit to return to St. Petersburg, and thence to travel to Moscow and Odessa for the purposes of their trade, and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at St. Petersburg has been instructed to inquire whether the Russian Government will give such a permit. Her Majesty's Government have not recently had occasion to make any representation to the Russian Government with regard to British subjects of the Hebrew faith not being permitted to reside at St. Petersburg and certain other places in Russia. An Imperial Commission for the revision of the laws affecting the Jews was appointed in February last. As the Government expect to receive a copy of that Report, they do not in the meantime propose to take any definite action in the matter.

LAW AND POLICE (IRELAND)—EXTRA POLICE TAX, CORK.

MR. SEXTON (for Mr. PARNELL) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether, notwithstanding that the Assize, Quarter Sessions, and Police Court records attest the absence of any serious crimes having been committed in Cork City for some years past, the citizens of Cork have annually to pay a heavy impost for the maintenance of an extra police force, which, according to the City Treasurer's account, amounted last year to £1,022 9s. 11d.; whether this force was drafted into Cork at the time of the Fenian rising, and retained there since; whether the Rates and Taxes necessary for maintaining the City are already over 9s. in the pound; whether hundreds of citizens are annually processsed, their goods sold, and their names struck off the Burgess roll, because they cannot pay these heavy rates; whether two members of this extra police force are at present under arrest, charged with having committed the only fatal outrage recorded in the City since another policeman shot a man on the Western Road some years ago; whether the Cork Corporation has frequently complained of the Rates being burdened with the cost of this unnecessary extra police force; and, whether, under these circumstances, he will undertake to have this extra Police Force withdrawn, and the citizens relieved of this taxation?

MR. TREVELYAN: It is true that there has been for some years an extra force in the city of Cork, for which the city has to pay, and the diminution of serious crime is considered to be in a great degree attributable to the presence of the police. Many persons, however, interested in the peace of the city consider the force to be too small, and the Corporation recently complained to the County Inspector that there was not sufficient Constabulary supervision over several matters in the city. The County Inspector had to reply, that with the number of men at his disposal he could do no more than at present. I am informed that it is the case that the city rates are over 9s. in the pound, of which the charge for extra Constabulary forms a very small fraction. No doubt, many persons are annually processsed for non-payment of rates; but there is no reason to think that the removal of the extra Constabulary would make any practical difference in this respect. It is true that two sub-constables were recently charged with being accessory to the death of a poor man named Leatham; but after an investigation which lasted four days, the magistrates refused information on the ground—first, that the evidence did not connect the accused with the occurrence; and, secondly, that the medical testimony went to show that death was the result of natural causes. The other fatal occurrence referred to by the hon. Member is as follows:—In 1878 a police patrol saw a man knock down a watchman by striking him with a hatchet on the head. They believed him to have committed murder, and called on him, in the Queen's name to stand, and, on his refusing to do so, they fired after him and killed him. A Coroner's Jury returned a verdict of "Justifiable homicide." I do not think I can hold out any immediate prospect of a diminution of the extra force.

MR. SEXTON (for MR. PARSELL) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether, notwithstanding the fact that the citizens of Cork have to pay over £1,000 per annum for an extra Police Force, the Police authorities charge the Executive Committee of the Cork Exhibition over £20 per week for Police on duty there; whether he is aware that the Exhibition has been organized by a Committee composed of men of all religious and political opinions, and presided over by the Earl of Bandon; and, whether, since the funds of the Exhibition were not provided by voluntary subscriptions from all parties, for the promotion of Irish industries, he will instruct the Police authorities to supply the Police necessary for protecting the exhibitors' property free of charge in future, and to refund the moneys already paid by the Executive Committee of the Exhibition?

MR. TREVELYAN: The charge made in this case is in accordance with the invariable practice in such cases, both in England as well as Ireland; and I regret that I see no ground upon which an exception can be made in favour of the Cork Exhibition. The Government keep a reserve force for emergencies like this among others.

PUBLIC HEALTH—THE HORNSEY SANITARY DISTRICT.

MR. ANDERSON asked the President of the Local Government Board, If he is aware that a part of Hornsey Sanitary District can not be drained except through the Tottenham District, and that, so far, the Tottenham Sanitary Authority has declined to permit this, and that consequently the Hornsey Board has issued notices requiring the construction of eighty-eight cesspools over a small area, and many more would be required; and, whether, in case of such disputes between two local authorities, the Local Government Board has power to interfere; or, if they have not power to do that, if they would, by consent of both, act as arbitrator between them; or, failing these alternatives, whether, in the interest of public health, they will introduce a Bill asking for extended powers?

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE: The estate to which it is presumed that the Question refers is Wright's Park Estate. The Board have not received any official communication on the subject from the owners or occupiers of the houses on that estate, or from the Local Board; but they have been informed generally of the facts. The estate consists of 99 houses; and if these houses had been erected, and the drainage system carried out in accordance with the plans approved by the Local Board, there would have been no difficulty in providing for the sewerage of the houses. About 80 of the houses have been provided with drains; but they have been so laid that the drains are lower than the outfall sewer, and the connections with that sewer are being gradually silted up. The proper drainage of these houses cannot now be effected without re-laying the drains, and this the owners are unwilling to do. As to the remaining houses, they have been erected at such a level that drains cannot be made to discharge into the outfall sewer of the district. The Local Board, with the view of securing some remedy, have required the owners to construct cesspools, this being the only order they could make in the matter; but they have made the requirement in the hope that the owners would re-arrange the drainage, and thus render the construction of the cesspools unnecessary. The Board have reason to believe that all the houses might be drained without the cost of re-laying the house drains if a connection were made with the Tottenham sewers; but they are not aware that, as yet, formal application has been made by the Hornsey Local Board to the Tottenham Local Board, although there have been communications on the subject between the surveyors of the two districts. The Board have reason to believe that the Hornsey Local Board will endeavour to come to some arrangement with the Tottenham Local Board. The Local Boards of the two districts are empowered by the Public Health Act, by agreement, to cause the sewers of the one district to communicate with the sewers of the other. Any dispute as to the terms and conditions on which the communication shall be made may be settled by the Local Government Board. The Board are not aware of any sufficient ground for further legislation on the subject.

REGISTRATION OF ELECTORS (IRELAND).

MR. HEALY asked Mr. Attorney General for Ireland, If he is aware that Dr. Darley, the County Court Judge for Wicklow, at Revision Sessions, ruled that if a man succeeds his father or mother in a rateable holding, having been twelve months or more in bonâ fide possession, having paid his rent and rates in his own name during that period, he is ineligible for the Voters' List unless his father or mother has bequeathed it to him by will or deed; whether it is the fact that a man taking a house or farm of the required rateable value is put on as a matter of course if he has been twelve months in bonâ fide possession; and, if he can say what the law is?

MR. TREVELYAN: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney General for Ireland has not seen any report of the decision in question, and desires me to say that if the ruling of the Revising Barrister be disputed it can be questioned on appeal; and that it would be improper to give an official statement of the law, which is contained in Statutes accessible to all. I have heard from Dr. Darley, who states that he decides all such cases according to the principles laid down by the Court of Appeal, and that his decisions have never been appealed against.

ARREARS OF RENT (IRELAND) ACT 1882 — THE COLLECTOR GENERAL OF RATES, DUBLIN.

MR. HEALY asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland,

Mr. Anderson

Whether the Government have yet decided, with regard to the retention in office of the Collector General for Dublin; and, whether it is usual to allow a charge of fraud to hang for five weeks over the head of an important public servant intrusted with the collection of millions of money, without the Government coming to any conclusion as to his suspension or dismissal?

MR. TREVELYAN, in reply, said, the question was being carefully considered by the Lord Lieutenant, who had now returned to Dublin. The last paragraph was a general Question, to which he did not think he could give any answer except that the circumstances of this case were not such as would, for instance, require the suspension of a public servant from his duties while the inquiry was going on.

MR. HEALY asked if the right hon. Gentleman was aware that his Predecessor in Office (Mr. Forster) removed Dr. Kenny from his office on a "reasonable suspicion," and yet here was the case of a man who had millions of public money passing through his hands, and who for five weeks had been allowed to remain in his office with a charge of fraud against him? There was the greatest anxiety among the citizens of Dublin about this matter.

MR. TREVELYAN: I cannot give any answer beyond what I have already stated.

PREVENTION OF CRIME (IRELAND) ACT, 1882—PROCLAMATION OF CO. LOUTH.

MR. CALLAN asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether, considering the peaceable condition of the county of Louth, as evidenced by the calendar of prisoners and the charges of the going Judges of Assize and Chairmen of Quarter Sessions, both as regards offences against person and against property, and the statements of the Chairman of Quarter Sessions, in June last, at Dundalk, who, addressing the Grand Jury, said that—

"As far as I can hear, the county has been in a very quiet state since my last visit;" and at the Summer Assizes for the county of Louth, of Mr. Justice Andrews, who, in charging the Grand Jury, said—

"I find that there are no Bills to go before you at the present Assizes, while only yesterday the County Court Judge concluded his sittings, and I understood he had only one case to go before him. Under these circumstances, I am very happy to tender you my sincere congratulations on the peaceful and orderly state of your county;"

and Sir John Robinson, foreman of the Grand Jury, who, on the same occasion, in presenting white gloves to the going Judge, said—

"It was a happy state of affairs that nothing had occurred to mar the peace and quietness that prevailed in the county of Louth;"

and of Mr. Justice Andrews, who, in accepting the white gloves, said—

"It was very gratifying to him to accept those white gloves, as an emblem of the peaceable state of the county, upon which he had taken the opportunity of congratulating them, and, through them, the community at large;"

and, whether, in view of these circumstances, he is prepared to remove the Proclamation of the county of Louth and the county of the town of Drogheda?

MR. TREVELYAN: I answered this Question the other day, and have nothing further to add.

GENERAL INDEX TO SESSION 1883.

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS.

It being a principal object of this Index, that the proceedings on each Motion shall be completely recorded, some abbreviations of forms were necessary. Those who are accustomed to the proceedings of Parliament will readily fill up the voids. Those who are not so familiar, may find the following explanation useful, but will find the whole formulae set out at length in the "Contents."

The names which immediately follow the title of a Bill are those of the Peers or hon. Members who have charge of the Bill.

The numbers which are added at stages of Bills are the official numbers of the prints and reprints ordered at each stage, and, with the Statute, will enable the reader to follow all the changes the Bill has undergone.

The entries—Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2^d;" Amendt. "this day six months;" Question put, "That 'now,' &c."—indicate the usual form of raising the issue—namely, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

"The Ballot, Amendt. on Committee of Supply" indicates that the Question was raised by means of an Amendment moved on the Motion (after the Order of the Day for the House to go into Committee of Supply had been read), "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair." In this case the issue is formally raised by the Motion "To leave out from the word 'That' to the end of the Question, in order to add" other words. The decision is taken on the Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The Nos. added to the "Parliamentary Papers" are in most cases those given in the Commons' "List of Papers for Sale."

Mr. Speaker: It is quite clear that the hon. and learned Member (Mr. Warton) would not be in Order in making both Motions, [279] 320

Questions—Amendments—A Question cannot be withdrawn unless, in the first place, the Amendment to it is withdrawn, [277] 1328

Mr. T. P. O'Connor moved "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," in order that the Bill might be committed pro forma, to allow of the insertion of Amendments by the Chief Secretary for Ireland. Mr. Buchanan asked, if this formal Motion was agreed to, would the House still have the opportunity of a Committee discussion? Mr. Speaker: If the Bill goes through the Committee pro forma, the Motion will still stand, that the Speaker leave the Chair for the re-committal of the Bill, [280] 1245

On Mr. E. Stanhope's Motion respecting East India Expenditure, the Under Secretary of State proposed an Amendment, which was negatived. Mr. Onslow had also given Notice of an Amendment; but Mr. Speaker ruled that he was too late to move it. Mr. Onslow said he had concluded that the Amendment of the Under Secretary of State would be carried; and he certainly thought he should have been in Order in moving his Amendment at the end of that Motion. It was not really an Amendment—it was an addendum; and if in Order he intended to move it. It was an addition referring to increased expenditure in India. Mr. Speaker said, the words of the hon. Member for Guildford being in the form of an addition, it is competent for him, if he thinks fit, to move them as an addition, [279] 306

Order of Amendments, [276] 979

The Half-past Twelve o'Clock Rule

Mr. Speaker explains the operation of the Standing Order of 18th February, 1879, as amended (Rule 97A), in respect of Notices of Motion and Orders of the Day, [279] 1751, 1752, 1753

The Rule does not apply to the case of a Bill which has come down from the House of Lords, and stands for second reading, unopposed, on the Paper, [277] 1103

Moved, To nominate the Select Committee on the Forest of Dean (Highways) Bill. Mr. Callan: I object. Mr. Speaker: According to the Standing Order the hon. Member cannot object to the Motion being made. The Half-past Twelve o'clock Rule does not apply to Motions of this kind, [279] 1455

Money Bills—In answer to Mr. Biggar—Mr. Speaker: This is a Bill to provide for the Pay and Pensions of the Constabulary and Police of Ireland, and no doubt it is a Money Bill, and therefore exempted from the operation of the Half-past Twelve o'clock Rule, [279] 687

Blocking Notices—The Standing Order relative to this subject (Registration of Voters (Ireland) Bill) appears to me very clear and positive. The notice of opposition on part of the hon. and learned Gentle (Mr. Warton) having been given on 19th March, and not renewed, does not—April 2—apply to the Motion before House, [277] 1271

The Half-past Twelve o'Clock Rule—Blocking Notices—Mr. Speaker states his view of true intent of the new Rule respecting "blocking Notices." By a strict construction of the Standing Order in question (Rule 97A), no Notice of opposition would be operative on the first day of sitting; any adjournment exceeding one week cannot think this could have been the intention of the House. In order, therefore, conform to what I believe to have been intention of the House, I should feel bound to hold that an allowance should be made for an intervening adjournment of the House, and that a Notice of opposition, given on the adjournment has been agreed to, would not lapse until the end of the week in which the House resumes Business, [279] 50

Mr. Speaker: I understand the contention to be that the Amendment in the name of noble Lord (Lord Burghley) is irregular irrelevant, and therefore does not apply blocking the Bill. The Amendment appears to me to be relevant to the Bill (Tithe & Charge Recovery Bill). I cannot rule it out of Order, [280] 1831

AMENDMENTS TO QUESTIONS

If the House decide that the original question should not be adopted, then, on the question that the words of the hon. Member (Mr. H. H. Fowler) be there added Amendment might be moved, [283] 167

Moved, "That the Bill (Criminal Code (dreadful Offences Procedure) Bill) be read the second time." Amendment made thereon. Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question," put, and agreed to. Mr. Mayne proposed to move an Amendment. Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. Member that I cannot move his Amendment, the House having already negatived the Amendment of the hon. Member for North Shropshire (Mr. Stanley Leighton), [278] 117

Mr. Speaker: The only point fully raised was, "That the words proposed to be left out of the Motion stand part of the Question." If the Main Question had been put to the House as a whole, the Amendment of the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. Onslow) would have been perfectly immisable, because the whole matter is then before the House, no Amendment could be put. The Amendment of the hon. Member for Mid Lincolnshire (Mr. E. Stansfeld) is now before the House, and until that is disposed of no other Amendment can be moved, [279] 1511

The course which has been taken by the House is quite regular. By the leave of the House the Amendment of the hon. Baronet John Lubbock has been withdrawn, there is no irregularity in taking an Amendment, [280] 1979

The Question immediately before the House is "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question." If the House decides that Question in the negative, then the Amendment of the right hon. Gentleman (Sir Lyon Playfair) can be put as an original Motion, and the hon. Member for Bradford (Mr. Illingworth) would be in Order in moving his Amendment, [280] 1980

There being four Amendments on the Paper, one upon the original Motion, and the other three Amendments upon that Amendment, if the House thought proper to allow the first Amendment to be withdrawn there would be no difficulty, Mr. Speaker thought, in recasting the other Amendments so as to adapt them to the altered conditions of the question. In point of Order, there was no objection to the first Amendment being withdrawn, and any Amendment would be then in Order upon the original Motion, [278] 204

An Amendment cannot be withdrawn without the general consent of the House, [278] 205, 1023

An informal Amendment, [283] 133

RULES OF DEBATE

Right of Precedence—Moved, "That the (National Debt) Bill be now read a second time." Sir Stafford Northcote and Mr. M. Henry rising together, Mr. Speaker called upon the former. Mr. M. Henry said, he had an Amendment standing first upon the Paper; and he would now, as a point of Order, ask for the ruling of the Chair upon the point, whether, as that was the case, he was not entitled to the possession of the House? Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Member had no positive right to precedence in consequence of his Notice of Amendment standing first upon the Paper. The right hon. Gentleman rose, and he felt it his duty to call upon him. In doing so he did not deprive the hon. Member of any right whatever. It rested entirely with the Chair to call upon the Member who should first address the House, [282] 1869

Rules of Debate (General)

Relevancy and Irrelevancy

Relevancy—It is right that I should remind the House that the immediate Question before it is the Motion for the Adjournment of the Debate. If the House desires to debate the Main Question, then the Motion for Adjournment must first be disposed of by being withdrawn, [282] 56

I must point out to the hon. Member (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) that he is going far beyond the scope of the Amendment proposed by the hon. Baronet, [276] 1309

Relevancy—Dr. Cameron asked whether it would be competent for the hon. Member for Eyo (Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett) to bring forward on the Indian Budget the question of the Indian Criminal Jurisdiction Bill? Mr. Speaker: I consider that on a Motion relating to the Indian Budget it would be open to the hon. Member to make general observations on the Bill referred to, [283] 968

Tedious Repetition—I must remind the hon. Member (Mr. O'Kelly) that there is a Standing Order against tedious repetitions (Rule 152a); and that that Standing Order may be applied against the hon. Member.—Mr. O'Kelly persevering, Mr. Speaker said: The hon. Member has already been cautioned that he must not tediously repeat his observations; and now I must call upon him to discontinue his speech, and to resume his seat.—Mr. O'Kelly thereupon resumed his seat, [282] 1081

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Any Question not put to Ministers of the Crown should relate to some Bill or Motion before the House, [277] 1281; [281] 780

Mr. Morgan Lloyd having put a Question to the Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works (Sir James M'Carel-Hogg) relating to the proposed Park for Paddington; Mr. Boord asked Mr. Speaker whether it was in Order for Questions to be put to and answered by the Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works? Mr. Speaker said: It appears to me that the Question is justifiable, as it relates to a matter of public interest, and may properly be put to the hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for Truro, [279] 1629

I must point out to the hon. Member (Mr. Jesse Collings) that he has already asked several Questions and has received Answers; and if he desires to put further Questions on the matter, I submit that Notice should be given, [279] 39

Mr. Speaker points out the inconvenience of putting Questions without Notice, [278] 1875

It has been the general practice of the House—and the House has always concurred in that practice—that no hon. Member should put a Question standing in the name of another Member unless requested to do so by that hon. Member, [279] 1756

Mr. Trevelyan—I put it to you, Sir, that this is not the sort of Question to answer, and that I am not bound to answer. Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Gentleman will exercise his own discretion in the matter, [283] 1350

Mr. Callan wished to ask the President of the Board of Trade two Questions. The first was, how many of these 62 Members read the Bill? Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member cannot put a Question of that kind, [282] 1348

Sir Walter B. Barttelot—I wish to ask Mr. Speaker, whether it is not usual, when Questions are passed by, that they should be taken at the end of the list? Mr. Speaker: The ordinary course is to wait until the Questions are got through, [282] 113

Argumentative Questions—Mr. Speaker: It is scarcely necessary to say that the two last lines [of the Question] might involve controversial Questions; but under the circumstances, I have not thought it right to interpose, [278] 807; [279] 892; [280] 206

Mr. Speaker holds that a certain Question is not out of Order; yet as it might be a matter involving controversy, he thought the epithets "violence" and "disloyal and menacing" might well be struck out, [277] 807; [283] 1742, 1743

Explanatory Statements—A Member is in Order in referring to such matters as relate to the Question on the Paper, and are necessary to explain it; but he is not entitled to enter into any controversial matter. And in referring to a former debate during the present Session is clearly out of Order, [276] 1611, 1905

But reference only to a speech made during the present Session is not out of Order, [276] 1696

He is not at liberty to enter into new and debatable matter, [277] 541; [281] 1362, 1511; [282] 539, 1340, 1468; [283] 66, 251, 1510, 1752

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the hon. Member (Dr. Cameron) that he is not entitled to debate the matter, although he may put a Question arising out of the Answer he has received, [277] 1173; [279] 222, 766, 1332, 1920; [281] 474; [282] 45; [283] 1183

Irregular Questions, [279] 44, 532

Hypothetical Questions—Mr. Speaker: I am bound to answer all Questions on points of Order as they arise; but I am not bound to answer hypothetical cases, [277] 811, 1111; [278] 1164

The hon. Member (Mr. O'Brien) is now asking the noble Lord (Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice) for his opinion, which is not regular in a Question, [280] 545; [281] 469; [283] 744

Order in Debate

Reference to a previous debate—The hon. Member (Mr. Mulholland) is entirely out of Order in referring to statements made in another debate in the course of the present Session, [276] 1611, 1693, 1696, 1905; [277] 1683

I did not understand the hon. Baronet (Sir Arthur Otway) to refer to a debate that has taken place on a former occasion; but simply to give an illustration to the House, [282] 1120

It is against the Rules of Debate for an hon. Member to read his speech, [276] 886

Speaking a second time—Explanation, [1108]

There being no Amendment before the II the hon. Member (Mr. Richard) was not entitled to make a second speech, [278] 16
Sir Charles Dilke said, the hon. and learned Member (Mr. Warton) had seconded Amendment, and therefore was not competent to speak. Mr. Warton said he not seconded the Amendment, but had acted as a Teller. Mr. Speaker said, the hon. learned Member offered himself as a Teller but did not second the Motion. He did think, under these circumstances, that the hon. and learned Member was out of Order, [277] 911

Mr. Courtney asked whether the noble Lord (Lord R. Churchill), having already spoken on this point, it was competent for him again to speak in reference to it?

Speaker: If the noble Lord raises some point he will be in Order; but otherwise will not, [278] 346

Right of Reply—Local Government Bill (Scotland) Bill—Moved, "That the Bill now read a second time." An Amendment moved. After debate, Amendment negatived. Main Question again proposed; debate

Sir W. Harcourt: The rather unbecoming form of procrastination which—Sir D. Wolff: I rise to Order. I wish to know whether the Home Secretary, having spoken on the second reading of this Bill, is entitled to reply or not? Mr. Speaker: This is a new Question before the House, and right hon. and learned Gentleman is fully entitled to reply, [282] 1568

Speaking a second time, [281] 443, 1033

By the general indulgence of the House the hon. Member may speak again, [278] 19

Disorderly Interruptions—Mr. Speaker must call upon the hon. Member for common (Mr. O'Kelly) not further to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. W. Forster). If he does, I shall have to name him to the House. [But the hon. Member continuing his disorderly conduct, was suspended from the service of the House], [617]

Un-Parliamentary Language

He (Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett) maintained the Government had no right to prate a international engagements in the House of Speech, and allow a Minister to make a disgraceful statement. Mr. Speaker: he must remind the hon. Member that the expression was un-Parliamentary, [276]

He (Mr. T. D. Sullivan) had listened to speech of the right hon. Gentleman Member for Bradford (Mr. W. E. Forsyth) who had garnered up in his heart for months the hatred and anger of a disreputable man. Mr. Speaker said, the expression by the hon. Member was un-Parliamentary and he was not entitled to make use of it, [276] 928

He (Mr. Callan) believed that prejudice and partisanship had made Mr. Justice Lawlor far more corrupt. Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member is not entitled to speak in language of that kind of one of the Judges of the land, and called on the hon. Member to withdraw it, [276] 934

If the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Trevelyan) has attributed want of truth to an hon. Member, he is out of Order, [282] 885

Mr. E. S. Howard asked how they were to believe what hon. Members opposite were saying? Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Member intended—which I cannot imagine he did—to impute want of truth to any body of Members in this House, of course he is out of Order, [278] 1933

He (Mr. Warton) would conclude by moving the adjournment of the Debate, in order to appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. and learned Member must withdraw that expression, [282] 1599

Mr. Healy: Mr. Speaker, the statement of the Land Commissioners is absolutely untrue, and I will call attention to this case at an early date. Their conduct is disgraceful in the matter. ["Order, Order!"]

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. Member that if he applies these epithets to the statement of the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Trevelyan), he knows very well that they are entirely out of Order, [282] 2105

If it were the intention of the hon. Member (Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett) simply to call the attention of the House to the conduct of another Member, without asking for the judgment of the House upon it, he would undoubtedly be out of Order, [277] 1500

Sir H. D. Wolff: The Government, which had itself passed Rules for the better transaction of Business, was obliged to resort to a trickiness which was unworthy of it. ["Order!"]

Mr. Speaker: I was sorry to hear the expression of the hon. Member; but I cannot say that he is out of Order, [278] 1919

Sir Alexander Gordon: I wish to know whether it is in Order for the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Stanley Leighton) to impute to any Committee of this House that they have acted partially, or in a partizan spirit? Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member has made the statement on his own responsibility, and I did not feel called upon to interfere, [278] 1096

The hon. Member (Mr. Findlater) evidently knew but little of the Bill (Harrison's Estate Bill), and he had grossly mis-stated the quantities involved. Objected to. The expression used by the hon. Member for Salford (Mr. Arnold) was "grossly mis-stated."

Mr. Speaker: I do not see anything in that expression that is irregular, [282] 1113

Mr. T. P. O'Connor: He was surprised the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. J. Lowther) should give an example of bad manners—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member for Galway Borough has made use of an expression which is un-Parliamentary, and will probably wish to withdraw it, [278] 1929

Injurious Language—Mr. Herbert Gladstone having, in a speech at Highgate, said—"They would not be able even to read the Bankruptcy Bill before Easter; and everybody knew that that was due to a dangerous and malicious conspiracy on the part of the Tory Party," and Mr. J. R. Yorke proposing to raise a question of Privilege thereon, Mr. Speaker suggested the dangerous precedent which would be set were the House to treat expressions used outside the House as breaches of Privilege; and added that if the hon. Member would withdraw the words "malicious conspiracy" the matter should go no further, [277] 570

Mr. Speaker: If the noble Lord (Lord R. Churchill) has disavowed the expression attributed to him, that disavowal ought to be accepted, [279] 1511

The hon. Member (Sir H. Drummond Wolff) is bound to accept the explicit statement of the Prime Minister, [280] 116

Interruption of a Member speaking, [280] 369

Mr. Speaker: I have to remind the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Bright) that, according to the ordinary practice of the House, it is usual, when attention is called to the conduct of a Member, for that Member to withdraw. The pleasure of the House having been signified to the contrary, Mr. Bright did not withdraw, [280] 812

It is irregular to open a debate upon an Amendment that has already been disposed of by the House, [276] 1034

Irregular Discussion of a Question—The hon. and learned Member (Mr. Serjeant Simon) has a Notice on the Paper upon this subject, and it is out of Order for him to discuss the subject-matter of that Notice, [276] 1961, 1962

Mr. Speaker: The observations of the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Hartington) were made in the debate on the Main Question. The Main Question is not now before the House; therefore the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. J. Lowther) is not in Order. The Question now before the House is that of Adjournment, [278] 1927, 1929

The adjournment of the debate having been moved, the hon. Gentleman is out of Order in speaking to the principle of the Bill, [276] 1593; [277] 1727; [280] 1621; [282] 686

Parliamentary Elections (Corrupt, &c. Practices) Bill—Order for Committee read; Moved, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair." Mr. Lewis (who had given Notice of an Amendment, which he declined to move) addressed the House. Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Member appeared to be going through the Bill clause by clause. That he was not entitled to do, for that was the function of the Committee, [279] 1947

The House being engaged in discussing the second reading of the Bill (Bankruptcy Bill), an hon. Member is entitled to refer to any clause in order to support his argument; but he is not entitled to go through the Bill clause by clause, [277] 851

The principle of the Bill (Criminal Code (Indictable Offences Procedure) Bill) having already been discussed on the Motion for the second reading, it would be irregular to renew that discussion on the Motion to refer the Bill to a Standing Committee. [278] 345
According to the immemorial practice of the House, after a Bill has been read a second time, the Speaker calls upon the Member in charge to say what course he intends to take with regard to the Committee, who would then propose to refer the Bill either to a Committee of the Whole House or to a Select Committee. Sometimes a debate arises upon that; but no discussion upon the merits of the Bill is allowed on such an occasion. The new Rule has made no alteration whatever in that respect, [278] 339, 340, 341

The House having passed the clause to which the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. Dodson) had adverted, clearly it was not now competent for the hon. Member (Mr. A. J. Balfour) to propose anything which would really involve a new arrangement of the Bill (Agricultural Holdings (England) Bill), [282] 1198

The hon. Member (Mr. T. P. O'Connor) is now referring to what took place in Committee; and he is, therefore, irregular, [282] 888

Adjournment—Debates on Motion for Adjournment—A Member must confine himself to the Question of the Adjournment of the Debate, [276] 964, 1095, 1596, 1598

Quotation of Documents—If the right hon. Baronet is now quoting from an official document he is bound to present it. Sir C. Dilke—It is not an official document. Mr. Speaker—Not being an official document the House can take it for what it is worth, [280] 259

Production of Documents—Mr. Speaker explains at length the Rule as to the production of documents, public and private. It is a well-known Rule of the House, that when a Despatch or other State Paper is cited by a Minister, it should be laid on the Table of the House; but it has always been held that that Rule does not extend to private communications. Such documents are never ordered to be produced by the House, or presented by command of Her Majesty, [282] 2108

Divisions (New Rules, No 4)

East India Revenue Accounts—Moved, "That the Debate be now adjourned;" and a Division being had, Mr. Speaker declared that he thought the Ayes had it; and his decision being challenged, directed the Noes to rise in their places. Objection being made, Mr. Speaker read the Standing Order (187A) in that behalf; and again called upon the Noes to rise in their places. Eight Members only having stood up, Mr. Speaker declared the Ayes had it, [283] 1708

On the London and North-Western Railway, &c. Bill, a division being had, Mr. Plunket voted in the majority. Objected, that Mr. Plunket being a Director of the London and North-Western Railway Company was peculiarly interested in the affairs of that Company, and moved that his vote be disallowed. Mr. Speaker: I have to inform the House that any hon. Member having a direct pecuniary interest in the question before the House is not entitled to vote. Colonel Alexander complained that his name did not appear in the Division List morning (Lord Wolseley's Annuity Bill), the number of names did not tally with number announced by the Tellers. Rules of Debate—Committees—Question Mr. Healy asked whether it was in Order put a Question in Committee after a question to 6 o'clock? Mr. Speaker said, he understood the hon. SELECT COMMITTEES

The House having ordered that the Select Committee on Harbours of Refuge do consist of 23 Members, who were then seven nominated: Mr. O'Donnell proposed Mr. Leamy be added to the Committee. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman cannot add the addition of a name without Notice, [518]

Public and Private Bills—Electric Lighting Provisional Orders Bill—Mr. Sheridan said, he was under the impression that by the Standing Order any Notice of opposition given to a Bill of this nature rendered it essential that the discussion should be postponed until another day. Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member is mistaken. The Standing Order does not apply in this case, because the Bill is a Public Bill. Mr. Sheridan wished to point out that it was promoted by a public company. Mr. Speaker: It is a Provisional Order Bill, and all Provisional Order Bills are Public Bills, [282] 1303

Bills having the same object—Mr. Speaker: I have examined the two Bills to which the hon. Member (Mr. Stanley Leighton) refers. The scope of the one is limited to providing a Court of Appeal; the other has a much wider scope. Now, these are both measures for the consideration of the House; and, as the House is well aware, it very often has before it several Bills for effecting the same object. No doubt, if one of these Bills were rejected by this House, and it were proposed to them to proceed with another Bill substantially the same, it would be irregular. But no Bill has yet been rejected by this House on this matter; and I see no ground for interposing, [278] 92

Land Improvement and Arterial Drainage (Ireland) Bill—Moved, "That the Second Reading of the Bill be deferred till Thursday next." Colonel King Harman, complaining that the Government had brought in Bills and placed them on the Orders of the Day before they had been printed, and that that was the third time during that week that the same course had been taken, moved "That the Order for the Second Reading be discharged" in consequence of the Bill not having been printed. Mr. Speaker said: The hon. and gallant Gentleman proposes to take a course which is most unusual and without precedent, [279] 879

Reference in Part—Mr. Stanhope said, he should like to ask the Speaker whether it was not competent for any hon. Member to move to add, at the end of the Attorney General's Motion, the words "except any particular clauses of the Criminal Code (Indictable Offences Procedure) Bill." Mr. Speaker: I think the proposal of the hon. Member is so novel that I cannot give an affirmative answer. I never heard of a Bill being referred to a Select Committee in part only, [278] 346

Consideration of Bill as amended—When the Order of the Day for the consideration of a Bill as amended in Committee of the Whole House has been read, the House will proceed to consider the same, unless the Member in charge of the Bill shall desire to postpone its consideration, or a Motion is made to re-commit the Bill (New Rule 11). Therefore, at this stage a Motion to re-commit the Bill (Friendly Societies (Nominations) Bill) could be made. Whereupon Mr. Whitely moved that the Bill be re-committed. After debate, Motion withdrawn; Bill considered, [280] 1828

New Clauses—On the occasion of considering new clauses, an hon. Member could delegate the duty of moving a new clause to another hon. Member; but he must present to move it himself, [282] 1995
Bill considered as amended—Mr. O'Kelly said, that, with the permission of the House, would move that the Bill (Irish Reproduction, &c. Bill) be read a third time. Objected to. Mr. Speaker: I must point out to hon. Member that it is not the constant practice of the House; but on occasions when a Bill has not been opposed at any of stages, and particularly at the end of a Session, that course is sometimes taken; and the hon. Member can plead urgency, it may be taken in this case, if the House think [282] 268

Money Bills

Sir R. Cross asked whether, inasmuch as several provisions of the Bill cast an expense upon the Exchequer, it was not necessary that the Bill (Court of Criminal Appeal Bill) should pass through Committee of the Whole House? Mr. Speaker: If the Bill involves a question of money, it would no doubt, be necessary that it should be committed, [277] 1246

Mr. Gorst: The Prime Minister proposes to convert the Annuities originally proposed by the Lords Alcester and Wolseley's Annual Bills into the payment of "a lump sum" and I want to know if that can be done by the present Bills, without bringing in new Bills? Mr. Speaker: In the event of being proposed to convert the Annuities into what is called "a lump sum," it would be necessary that the Committee should be instructed to take that course, [279] 46

The Bill to which the hon. Member (Mr. O'Connor) refers (Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill) deals in almost every clause with money and because one particular clause may refer to money, that does not bring the Bill under the Half-past Twelve o'clock Rule. Being a Money Bill, it is clearly in Order to bring it on, [280] 1983

SUPPLY

Nomination of a Chairman of Committee of Ways and Means—Mr. Speaker states that course he has taken, following precedent established on similar occasions, on proposal, "That an hon. Member do take the Chair," as Chairman of a Committee, [276] 1321, 1325

Order in Committee of Supply—It is not the Speaker to say what will be either in or out of Order in Committee of Supply, [276] 221

The New Rule, No. 12 (425a) provides that the Speaker shall leave the Chair on Mondays and Thursdays without Question put, except first going into Committee of Supply upon Army, Navy, and Civil Service Estimates. On question, Mr. Speaker said: If Supplementary Estimates are proposed on Monday as the first Order of the Day, it will be the duty, as soon as the Order for going

Supply is read, to leave the Chair, [276] 1261

Votes on Account—Mr. Speaker said, that if a Vote on Account should be proposed, either on Monday or Thursday, he should consider that, in pursuance of the Standing Orders with regard to Supply, he should be bound to leave the Chair at once, [277] 220

Amendments that are not relative to the class of Votes that are about to be considered in Committee cannot properly be moved on Motion, "That Mr. Speaker do leave the Chair," [277] 221

Captain Price asked whether it was in Order for the Government to take Votes 15 and 16 (of the Navy Estimates) that night, taking into consideration the fact that when the Committee last reported Progress they were in the middle of Vote 2? Mr. Speaker said, it was quite competent for the Government to do so, and that it was not altogether a question of Order, but a question of the convenience of the House, [280] 1713

Civil Service Estimates—Mr. Labouchere asked whether an hon. Member would have the right to call attention to grievances on the occasion of the Motion for Supply (Civil Service Estimates) set down for the first Thursday after the Vacation, or whether he would be precluded on account of a Vote on Account having been taken already? Mr. Speaker replied, that an Amendment relative to the Civil Service Estimates would be admitted on that occasion. Mr. Speaker considered the Revenue Estimates to be a branch of the Civil Service Estimates, [277] 815

MISCELLANEOUS

Mr. Labouchere asked Mr. Speaker whether he had received certain resolutions referred to by the Prime Minister; and, if so, whether he deemed it advisable to communicate them to the House. Mr. Speaker said, that several resolutions had been sent to him by chairmen of public meetings, but they had no official character, and therefore he should not be warranted in communicating them to the House, which could only be properly approached by petition on a subject of this kind (Mr. Bradlaugh), [280] 1145

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday (Durham) Bill—Sir Wilfrid Lawson said, he heard the Clerk call the Motion that the Order be discharged. He should like to know what hon. Member moved the discharge of the Bill? Mr. Speaker: The discharge of the Order is proposed in pursuance of the directions by telegraph of Mr. Theodore Fry, whose name is on the back of the Bill. Sir W. Lawson asked, was it possible to make a Motion in relation to a Bill by telegraph; and also, whether another hon. Gentleman whose name was on the back of the Bill wishing to put it down for to-morrow, would the telegram stand in his way? After conversation, Mr. Speaker said: The House will take what course it thinks best, [282] 2247, 2248
